Patient-Centered Medical Home

A Patient-Centered Medical Home (PCMH) is a system of care in which a team of health professional's work together to provide all of your health care needs. We use a team approach to communicate and coordinate the best care for you.

You, the patient, are the most important part of Patient-Centered Medical Home. When you take an active role in your care and work closely with your team, you make sure that you are getting the best care possible.

As your personal physician our responsibility is:

To make sure that we are available when you need us, to listen to your needs and concerns, to explain diseases, treatments, and results in an easy-to-understand way, to coordinate your care with other healthcare providers and entities, to make sure you have instructions for your treatment goals and that you understand them.

As our patient, your responsibilities are:

Make sure to ask questions, sharing your concerns and taking an active role in your healthcare. Being honest with us about your history, symptoms and other important information, taking your medication, keeping your appointments, letting us know if you have any problems with your medications or meeting your goals. Making sure you understand all instructions and future plans at the end of each visit.
